Introduction
Bank Indonesia (BI) estimates that the world economy in 2023 will decline to 2.6%, resulting in an estimated threat of a global recession in 2023 (Oliviera et al., 2023). The unstable global economy has also affected the Indonesian economy, especially in the export-import channel and foreign capital flows.

The global recession will certainly weaken exports which are one of the sources of growth in Indonesia. Furthermore, weakening exports followed by shrinking foreign capital flows will weaken the rupiah exchange rate, especially capital outflows have the potential to increase in line with the increase in benchmark interest rates in developed countries. If we assume that the world will experience a recession, then the impact either directly or indirectly will hit the domestic economy, anywhere. Therefore, every country needs to prepare itself to face the threat of recession.

In this condition, Indonesia needs to increase economic independence through strengthening the domestic economy which is none other than Micro, Small and Medium Enterprises (MSMEs) (Romdhona et al., 2021). This means that in the midst of increasing economic uncertainty, MSMEs can be the savior of the Indonesian economy. MSMEs are able to become a source of frontline acceptance that can survive and be a solution in facing various crises that have occurred in Indonesia (Mulyana et al., 2021). In 1998, MSME players became the savior of the national economy and became the driving force of the economy at that time.

The ASEAN Investment Report states that as of September 2022, Indonesia has the largest number of MSMEs in the ASEAN region. In 2021, MSMEs in Indonesia are estimated to reach 65.46 million units. Furthermore, from this amount, MSMEs are able to absorb up to 97% of the workforce, contribute 60.3% to Gross Domestic Product (GDP), and contribute 14.4% to national export activities. Therefore, this sector contributes greatly to efforts to reduce the number of unemployed. Through an increase in the number of MSMEs that always increase, indirectly the number of unemployed will be reduced and economic growth increases.
For MSMEs, running a business amid the threat of world economic weakness is certainly not easy. MSMEs need to manage financial health. They must also be able to develop their products through digital technology which is now very important to keep up with the times. Currently, the acceleration of digitalization is one of the most important in the development of MSMEs.
